Nicole's Photos The wireless Nikon WU-2 hot shoe flash is another way to get great light, which we discuss in Chapter 8. Looking through the viewfinder gives you a chance to adjust the lighting you want for the photograph. Adjust the light by opening the shutter, setting the shutter speed, and opening the aperture to get the correct exposure. Use the room light to add balance and contrast in your photos. Turn on the desk lamp and use its light to balance the light of the flash, which makes for a nice pop of light. The room light lightens the shadow areas and balances the ambient light, allowing the light from the flash to stand out. You can use the flash as a background light as well as a subject light. As long as you use a longer shutter speed and open up the aperture to get enough light, you can use the flash as a background light. There are a number of techniques you can use for this: * What's going on in the frame? If a subject is in motion, the flash will be a good background light, since it gives the subject speed and a chance to look natural. If the subject is moving toward the light, the flash will give it added depth. If the subject is moving away from the light, the flash will leave a shadow. * Mixing both backgrounds Use the flash as the main light and add other light that's less bright, such as the room light. The brighter background will balance the picture, and the light from the room will make the background seem brighter and better balanced. * Adding a background If you take a picture of a carpenter working on a wall, for example, you can add a light to his face to make it seem less flat and add detail. You can also turn on the room light, adjust the room light to have a more warm and happy feel, and use this as the background. A light placed at this angle will balance the background and add warmth and detail to the portrait. ## Reflections Reflections are fun to work with Messenger and Playground for Social Business Versatile and Innovative .NET technology for Business We're bringing relational databases into the 21st century. We're on a mission to bring the power, simplicity, and security of relational databases to the 21st century. Because relational databases are so useful and so old, we often find them limited to just one application. PowerGrid is a next-generation relational database solution that gives businesses the ability to use their relational database in many different applications and across many different technologies. PowerGrid also makes data storage and analytics simple and fast. PowerGrid is a next-generation relational database and SQL Server successor that offers a database architecture designed to improve usability and performance for small, medium, and large deployments. PowerGrid's comprehensive API provides embedded data access capabilities that allow support for a wide variety of technologies. It is the only database product on the market that allows its developers to embed PowerGrid directly into application code, enabling them to insert PowerGrid into applications that were not previously possible. Like traditional databases, PowerGrid includes a strong ACID-compliant transaction system. But unlike other RDBMS systems, PowerGrid's engine never stops while you're performing complex updates on a large number of tables; its row-level locking means that PowerGrid lets you perform complex updates in parallel. You get ACID compliance while using a database engine that is more compact and faster, on demand. Unlike relational databases, PowerGrid was designed to be easily extended. It provides a powerful and flexible plug-in framework. It supports the ACID and CAP (Commit, Atomic, Partitionable, and Cascade) transactions and SQL Language as well. PowerGrid's plug-in framework is an essential technology that will enable PowerGrid to continue to evolve for years to come.

Q: Slightly bigger radius than exact edge I want to draw a circle on the canvas in some shape of a circle. However, I want to have a slightly bigger radius than the exact edge. Here is what I have already: What I need is something like this: This is how I create the radius: // a - StrokeCap, b - StrokeJoin canvas.arcTo(circle, 50, 30, 300, 300, a | b); A: The easiest way (but not necessarily the most efficient) is to draw a rectangle around the shape, draw the circle to it, and remove it again. Edit Here is a detailed how-to. In today's technology driven world, securing digital information is a very important problem. There are a number of reasons for this—for example, the tendency for documents to become electronic in nature, and the use of digital devices to store information. In the past, securing digital information was a relatively simple problem. For example, one simply encrypted the information prior to being shared or stored. However, there are a number of problems with such an approach. One problem is that once information is stored in an encrypted format, it may be difficult to retrieve. A second problem is that users may have the ability to decrypt information without the proper permissions. A third problem is that if the information is stored in an encrypted format, the user is often left with little or no information regarding the documents history. Thus, the problem of securing digital information has now become much more complex. Thus, there is a need for an improved method and system for securing digital information.
